Remarks:

On June 23, 1888 the Secretary of War transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury a portion of the Fort Caswell military reservation on Oak Island, N.C. to be used for the erection of a life-saving station and boathouse. A different site had been selected four years earlier. The island is located south of the mouth of the Cape Fear River and the site selected in 1894 was on Piney Point about 3.5 miles from the point where the shoal forming the bar off the mouth of the river connects with the mainland. It was about 300 yards from the head of a creek which empties into the river near Smithsfield, N.C. The site was described as high and grassy and about one hundred yards from the ocean yard.

On April 20, 1888, however, a different site was selected for the projected Oak Island Life Saving Station. On July 23, 1891, the War Department granted the Treasury Department Life Saving Service "permission to use a lot of 75 feet square as indicated on an accompanying chart, and to occupy the beach in front thereof, on the Fort Caswell Military Reservation, N.C. as a new site for the boathouse of the Oak Island Life Saving Station, in lieu of certain premises on that reservation, the use of which was granted by War Department letter of the 9th ultimo (June 9, 1891)." This was a new site for the boathouse only. The Treasury Department eventually acquired 57.2 acres of the Fort Caswell Military Reservation by an act of Congress in April 1939.

This original building was used until a new larger 10,000 square foot facility was built in 1992. However, this structure was accidentally burned down February 1, 2002 with no loss of life or injuries. The current building was commissioned in July of 2004.

The original 1889 life saving station house is just across the street from the current [as of 2006] station's main gate on the beach and is now a private residence.
