What Service Members Need to Know About Employment

Maybe you're closing the chapter on your military life and opening a new one, or you're in the process of making long-term plans. This means transitioning from being a service member to a civilian employee in a company, nonprofit or maybe the government. As a service member, you have many resources available to help you with this significant change. Here's an overview of what you need to know as you seek employment. Explore your career path

There's a difference between a job and a career. Both pay the bills, but a career is more likely to give you a sense of meaning and accomplishment. Finding a career that matches your skills and interests is the key to job satisfaction. Invest some time in a little soul-searching before you begin your search to make sure you're going down the right path. Whether you plan to continue in your current field after leaving military service or you wish to pursue a new opportunity, you should ask yourself two questions:

1. What are my career goals?
2. What steps do I need to take to position myself for success?

Meet your CONG Employment Specialist

Hello, I'm Laura Farlett and I am the CONG Employment Specialist. As a retired Navy Chief, I'm no stranger to the military way of life. While on active duty, I did a tour as a Command Career Counselor. I learned a lot of valuable tools that I can use to assist veterans in finding meaningful employment and education opportunities.

I am able to provide numerous employment services and resources. I am happy to brief any unit or group that would like information on civilian and federal employment, resume writing and job searching. Let me know what you would like for me to brief and I can tailor a presentation to your needs.

I conduct one-on-one virtual trainings using the Department of Labor's website, O*NET Online (<https://www.onetonline.org/>) to assist you in resume writing, job searching, salary negotiations and translating military skills into civilian. Contact me today to schedule a phone consult!
