PRIOR ACTIVE DUTY SERVICE

Flexibility of Duty Status

Traditional Reservist trains part time for pay and retirement points or just retirement points on a recurring basis.

An Air Reserve Technician (ART) carries dual status, working as a full-time Department of Defense civil service employee and as Reservist performing the same job in an Air Force Reserve Command unit.

Active Guard Reserve (AGR) is a category of National Guard or Reserve members in the Selected Reserve who are ordered to active duty or full-time National Guard duty for the purpose of organizing, administering, recruiting, instructing, or training the reserve component units.

Annual Training Requirements

Most units drill one weekend per month. Plus you get two weeks a year to stay current on military readiness.

Deployment Dwell Ratio

You may be activated to full-time service in a voluntary or involuntary status. This can be with your unit or individually. These activations may vary in length and location. Typical dwell ratio is deployed 6 months and home for 2 years.

Flexibility of Location & Travel

Drill at a Reserve unit close to home or your school.

Many opportunities to travel to support AFRC units or active duty units.

Education Benefits

Members can access up to three years of educational assistance. This benefit is available through the Montgomery GI Bill® for Selected Reserve. Reservists may also earn Post-9/11 GI Bill benefits, which may be transferred to eligible dependents when certain eligibility criteria are met.

Commissary and exchange privileges: Reserve Component members and their eligible dependents have full-time access to on-base shopping. This includes the discounted food and department stores.

Healthcare Benefits

TRICARE Reserve Select is subsidized, fee-based health care coverage. It is for reservists and their families when the military member is not on active-duty orders. Reservists on active duty for more than 30 days receive comprehensive medical and dental care at no cost. While their service member is activated for more than 30 days, family members receive health care coverage.
