Pope keeps up high reliability rate

Pope continued to have one of the highest reliability rates for Military Airlift Command bases in October, according to recently compiled statistics.

During October, 1,015 aircraft of various types took off from Pope, Of those departures, only 67 were delayed and 78 were early. Pope's overall con-trollable reliability rate for the month was 95.3 percent.

VICE CHIEF OF STAFF UNITED STATES AIR FORCE WASHINGTON, D. C. 20330

29 October 1981

Dear Ed

Thank you very much for the super visit with the 317 Tactical Airlift Wing and the short visit with just some of your operations. I was truly impressed with the loading operation and your C-130 crews. The airdrop was on the mark.

Please pass on my appreciation to the men and women of the Wing who worked to make the visit such a success. I am constantly amazed at the dedication and professionalism of our young men and women — they truly make our Air Force the best in the world. Additionally, we should be proud of the way we successfully interface with the XVIII Airborne Corps.

Thanks again and keep up the good work.

Clearing six o'clock

By Lt. Col. Bobbie L. Mitchell 41st Tactical Airlift Squadron commander

My recent participation with other members of the 41st Tactical Airlift Squadron in RED FLAG 82-1,--a very realistic simulated combat environment--and our use of some elementary tactical procedures and techniques highlighted for me our basic dependence on each other for successful mission accomplishment.

The basic aircrew procedure of "clearing six o'clock" for individual aircraft defense and flying "line abreast" for mutual aircraft support are key methods that defenseless airlift aircraft use to survive in a high threat environment.

They describe the way each member of a crew-the loadmaster, the engineer, the navigator and the pilots-insure that no enemy aircraft can work his way into the blind spot behind their aircraft or their formation, for an attack. Each crew member is providing mutual support to his comrads who he knows are doing the same for him.

The end result is that the crew is stronger than the sum of its individual parts.

Such an attitude is critical not only to the combat scene but to our daily operations—and the success or failure of the whole idea revolves around a single concept—caring. Caring about what happens to the other person, how he or she progresses, insuring that he or she has all the information necessary to do the job right or to make the right decision.

Sound simple? Maybe, but, all too often we get so preoccupied with our own goals, solving our own problems, doing our own job, that we become self-centered without being aware of it. The result is that the unit and the Wing never achieves its full potential, nor does the individual.

Caring means covering for someone else. Not covering up, but protecting his six o'clock.

It means getting the word out today rather than waiting till tomorrow morning when it could be too late to influence a key decision.

Caring means correcting one another and providing good constructive criticism in an effort to improve our individual and collective performance.

It also means being mature enough to accept criticism when it is directed our way. It doesn't mean that mistakes won't be made. But if we develop the right, concerned attitude, those mistakes won't happen as often or have as much significance.

By taking care of each other we take care of the unit and, as a consequence, ourselves.

So "clear six." It's a team effort.

There are many reasons given for not wearing safety belts, all of which are fallacious. They include:

I don't want to be trapped in the car in the event of fire. State patrols who handle thousands of fatal accidents each year claim this is an unsubstantiated and invalid conclusion.

It's too much bother; I don't have the time. It actually takes less than three seconds to put on a safety belt.

I'm a safe driver; I won't have an accident. That's what the 50,000 people who lost their lives in 1979 thought.

I'm only going a short distance. Actually, more than two-thirds of all accidents occur within 25 miles of home, and half of all fatal accidents occur at speeds under 40 mph.

Let's look at some of the reasons people should wear safety belts.

In an accident you will not be thrown out of the car, hit the pavement, be run over by another car or crushed under your own.

You will not be thrown against the windshield or metal parts of your automobile.

You will arrive at your destination less fatigued. Safety belts provide support and improve your posture while driving.

The buckling of a safety belt can

The buckling of a safety belt can remind you that accidents happen even to the most careful drivers.

By wearing a safety belt, you set a good example for your children and other loved ones.

A state trooper with 25 years of experience, who has assisted at thousands of serious accidents in his career, made the following statement:

"I've had the distasteful job of helping thousands of people who were seriously injured in automobile crashes. Many of those persons were dead on arrival at the hospital. But I have never unbuckled the safety belt of a person who was dead. In my opinion, 90 percent of all the fatal accidents that I have been associated with could have been prevented had the injured person worn a safety belt."

So don't sit on it-wear it. Safety belts save lives.

Some popular myths about seatbelts

This advice is 'for the birds'

Well guys, it's that time of the year again. The busy season for your friendly local "for the birds" travel agency is again upon us.

Before you depart on your annual migration, we have a few hints to pass on to make your journey more enjoyable.

First of all, don't forget to call ahead for reservations. With more than 20 million of us migrating south by the end of November, good nesting areas

Secondly, be on the look out for those featherless turkeys that are a constant threat to us. The surgeon bird has confirmed that these metal monsters are hazardous to our health.

They pose a threat, not only to our normal migration altitudes up to 6,000 feet, but also to altitudes much higher. So you high flyers also need to keep a sharp look out.

These guys also have the nerve to fly during our peak flying hours--near sunrise, sunset and midnight. Don't they realize that we were here first? Talk about no respect!

You may ask, "What can we do about these featherless turkeys?" Welsee and avoid is still our best tactic. We just wish those other guys would do the same.

The skies would be a lot safer if they turned on their lights below 10,000 feet and anytime the visibility is poor. Anything that they could do to make themselves more visible would certainly be welcome.

You should also avoid their expansive concrete nesting areas where they gorge themselves on JP-4. The temptation to run at these fields is too great for many of us. Unfortunately, quite a few of us leave these fields splattered on a radome or fricasseed in an engine.

As a final caution to all birds--know your own capabilities and the capabilities and specific traits of those with whom you share the air. "Aircraft" strikes are no fun--especially to us of the feathered persuasion.

Have a safe winter and we'll look forward to you contacting us in February or March for your return migration--MNS

Rumor has it

By Sgt. Terrie T. Rogers Base Career Advisor

It seems that fall is not only the season for colorful leaves, but also an over abundance of colorful rumors.

With the start of a new fiscal year, everyone seems to have their own interpretation of what has passed and what will pass.

Just to set the record straight, at this point the Fiscal Year 1982 appropriations bill has not been signed and no one knows for sure when it will be signed. Until then, all members reenlisting in a selective reenlistment bonus skill will have their bonus computed at the pay scale in effect Sept. 30 even though the Uniformed Services Pay Act of 1981 has been signed.

Anyone reenlisting before the bill is signed will be taking a chance that it won't be retroactive to Oct. 1. The Special Actions (Reenlistment) Unit has provisions such as one-month extensions to help you out.

tensions to help you out.

Maybe you heard the one about obligated service no longer being counted against SRB pay. Well yes, there are provisions in the pay act for certain circumstances—such as extensions for permanent change of stations retainability—however this provision has not been passed yet and there is no promise that it will.

The SRB program was more than doubled in Fiscal Year 1981 and will be substantially increased again in Fiscal Year 1982. Many Air Forc. speciality codes will be added to the list and many will be increased.

For information on SRBs contact me at Ext. 4855.

Space A travel humanized, less hassle for base hoppers

In a continuing effort to improve humanize the registration procedures for space available travel, the Military Airlift Command has changed its sign-up policy according to officials at Pope Passenger Service.

Under the past regulation, "space A" passengers were required to be present for all scheduled departures or risk being removed from the space A list. This is no longer required.

The space A traveler will only be asked to revalidate his or her intention once every three days. This can be done by signing the revalidation list posted next to the space A register every three Passengers must check in one and a half hours prior to scheduled departure times. Baggage is strictly limited to 66 pounds.

A military member can travel Space A with a valid identification card. He or she need not be on leave status.

military member can travel in civilian clothes on Space A flights as long as the clothing is in good taste. However, it's advisable to a pack a uniform because other command bases still require it.

Family members cannot travel on military aircraft within the continental United States. They may travel to overseas locations when accompanied by their military sponsor.

Following is a list of AUTOVON and civilian telephone numbers for bases to which Pope frequently flys. The bases may be called to check on flights to desired destinations.

Ration breakdown... Not their normal job

'A lot of people think the shelves (of the Pope Commissary) just mysteriously get stocked," said SrA. Terry Morton, supply services specialist with the 317th Services Squadron Ration Breakdown Section. 'Somebody has to do it."

Airman Morton is one of three ser-vice people who deliver and stock groceries every two days at the Pope Commissary Annex. In addition, the three-man team delivers food items from Fort Bragg to the two Pope dining halls every three days.

Stocking commissary shelves is not usually considered to be a part of the supply service specialist's job description, but is required by the unique situation at Pope. There are three other supply service specialists in the squadron. Two of them work in Linen Exchange and one is the noncommissioned officer in charge of the sec-

Airman Morton, a three-year Air

Force veteran, said he gets a great deal of satisfaction from his job because "getting food to the people is a vital part of the mission."

SSgt. Lorenca Scarborough, explained that the Pope commissary belongs to the Army. "Our only connection to it is delivering items to it," he said.

He added that if the commissary service had to hire people to do the same job, it would be difficult to operate the Pope annex at a cost effective status and, "it might have to close down."

Sergeant Scarborough believes "very few people know what this job entails." He said, "Very few people even know that we exist."

"This job takes a lot of self motivation," he said. "You learn a lot of aspects of the job. Since we work closely with the Army, we have to adjust to their ways of doing things.

"In order to get the job done, close coordination with the Army Comissary Service is essential.'

Fraudulent BAQ receipt causes trouble for divorcees

By Brenda Cox, Chief Cost and Management Analysis

Most people, when reading articles on fraud, waste and abuse, tend to think of massive giveaway programs, poor decision making, white collar crime and kickbacks.

While these acts constitute a great deal of the fraud, waste and abuse in federal government, minor individual indiscretions also contribute.

An example of a common fraudulent act in the armed services is the unauthorized receipt of basic allowance for quarters with dependents by divorced military members

Everyone knows that a divorce is a traumatic experience for all participants, and that little things--such as notifying your personnel and financial offices of your new marital status-tend to slip through the cracks during those trying periods.

However, acceptance of money from the federal government under false pretenses (intentional or not) does constitute fraud.

Investigations conducted by the Air Force Office of Special Investigations have reported several instances where service members receiving unauthorized BAQ titlements. Normally, these instances involved the remarrying of the nonmilitary spouse to another service and both ex-and current spouses claiming the same dependents.

A divorced member may draw the dependents rate for several reasons. One reason is when the member retains custody of children or gains additional dependents. Another reason is when the member pays child support as specified by a court order. This support must be equal to the BAQ for members residing in single quarters or equal to at least the difference between single rate BAQ and with dependent rate BAQ for members authorized to live off base.

To insure that these two allowances are adhered to, the Accounting and Finance Office currently monitors a program designed to detect potential BAQ entitlement fraud cases. program consists of a quarterly BAQ entitlements match which compares financial and personnel records.

Every service member is responsible for notifying the Accounting and Finance Office of any change in their BAO entitlements. They are also required to recertify their entitlement every two years.

Failure to notify personnel and financial offices of changes in marital and dependent status constitutes fraudulent receipt of BAQ and is considered a criminal offense.

Pope takes two top prizes in Air Force media contest

The Hercules Herald won second place in its category in the 26th annual Air Force Media Contest recently and

1st Lt. Brian P. Hoey, 317th Tactical

Airlift Wing, chief of Public Affairs, took first place in the published feature article category.

The two Pope awards were among six presented to Military Airlift Com-mand newspapers. The Hercules Herald placed higher in its category than any other base newspaper in the command.

In all, 48 people earned awards in the contest which recognizes outstanding work by Air Force people in the field of military print and broadcast journalism.

Judging was conducted Oct. 27-28 at Headquarters Air Force Service Information and News Center at Kelly AFB, Texas.

A total of 166 entries representing finalists from major commands and separate operating agencies worldwide were judged. Selected first-place winners will be forwarded to the Department of Defense for judging in the interservice Thomas Jefferson awards competition later this year.

Good things in small packages, energy saving can be simple

Another small step which will save lots of energy is to wash laundry with the coolest possible water. Almost all clothes can be washed in cold water if an appropriate detergent is used.

Pope Scout volunteers receive awards at dinner

Several volunteers with the Pope Boy Scout program received awards at the Tuocs District Recognition Dinner Nov. 6.

The District Award of Merit was presented to Marilyn Loomis of Pack 759. During the past year she has acted as scout coordinator and publicity chairman for the pack, Tuocs publicity chairman and Fall Roundup chairman for Tuocs District. She has also worked at the Cub Scout Day Camp, Scout-O-Rama, Camporee, Cub Field Days and other district and council functions. She writes the Tuocs District newspaper and newsletter each month and acts as a commissioner for a cub pack on Fort Bragg.

The District Award of Merit is the highest award given at district level. It is awarded to those people who have shown outstanding service to youth outside the line of regular duty.

outside the line of regular duty.

Jan Logan, den leader coach of Pack 759 and assistant program chairman for Cub Scouts in Tuocs District, was one of nine volunteers who received the Distinguished Leadership Citation. This is the second highest award given at the district level. It is awarded in recognition of distinguished leadership and noteworthy service within the local district.

Ronnie Bowen, cubmaster of Pack 759, Connie Bowen, Mary Krewson, Robert Moore and Nancy Moore, den leaders for the pack and Larry Chase of Troop 759 received the Distinguished Service Award. This is a district award given to volunteers who have given distinguished service to scouting. Larry Chase, Russ Geier, Dave Larry Chase, Russ Geler, Dave Loomis and Tom Young, Troop 759, were among volunteers recognized for attending Wood badge training, the highest level in scout training.

Tom Neville from Explorer Post 759 was one of nine leaders whose units received awards at the dinner for having a more than 40 percent growth in membership since August.

Members of Pack 759 were recognized for working at the Cub Scout Summer Day Camp and volunteers from the pack and troop were noted for work with the Spring Camporee and Fall Roundup.

Pack 759 received the Summertime Pack award. Troop 759 was presented the National Camping Award.

Pack, Troop and Post 759 each earned the National Honor Unit award for 1981

Spring Lake Mayor, Evelyn Parker, was the guest speaker at the dinner. Col. Jerry Angell, 317th Combat Support Group commander and his wife were among the invited guests.

Bright Star deployment

Almost 3,000 Fort Bragg paratroopers began deploying this week for Rapid Deployment Joint Task Force exercises in the Middle East. The Pope flightline was the scene of much of the deployment activities as Army equipment was loaded onto aircraft. Units of the XVIII Airborne Corps will be taking part in exercise Bright Star '82 in the Middle East during November and December (U.S. Air Force photos by TSgt. Ulric Wair)

STEP promotions permanent

The Stripes f5r Exceptional Performers program has been approved on a permanent basis by Air Force Chief of Staff, Gen. Lew Allen, Jr.

Air Force-wide quotas for Fiscal 1982 will be increased to some 445, about 245 more than in Fiscal 1981. Future quotas are expected to level off at about the fiscal 1982 number, Air Force Personnel officials in Washington announced.

STEP permits major commanders, separate operating agency commanders and senior officers in Air Force units with large enlisted populations to select for promotion a limited number of outstanding performers with exceptional potential.

The program supplements existing promotion programs and is designed for unique and unusual circumstances which clearly warrant promotion.

During the test program, quotas were based on the number of enlisted members in grades airman first class through technical sergeant. Airmen first class are no longer included under STEP since exceptional performers in this grade are now promoted under the senior airman, below-the-zone program.

Major commanders, SOA commanders and senior Air Force officers allocated quotas may delegate the selection authority to the lowest level they deem appropriate.

Air Force officials say selection should be based on recommendations from subordinate commanders or officers or personal knowledge of the nominee rather than through administrative board process.

STEP allocations through September 1982 are being provided directly to commanders and senior officers. Commanders or Senior Air Force officers of organizations with small enlisted forces that don't get a quota allocation forward nominations to Air Force Manpower and Personnel Center where a board selects the best of those nominated.

More information on STEP is available from promotions and testing, Ext. 2472.

Blue jacket wear clarified

WASHINGTON (AFNS)--Clarification of policy for wear of the lightweight blue jacket and combination one uniform was announced by Air Force personnel officials here.

It is inappropriate to wear the lightweight blue jacket in certain situations, said the officials. It may not be worn off base to formal, organized functions such as luncheons, meetings, symposiums, conferences and conventions.

The jacket should also not be worn to off-base business establishments for extended shopping, formal evening dining, socializing or to take part in entertainment.

This policy does not apply to private luncheons or stops at fast food restaurants nor is it intended to preclude convenience stops at service stations, grocery stores and the like.

Major command or installation commanders may adapt this policy to local conditions and unique situations, however.

On-base wear of the jacket is not restricted, except as directed by the local commander.

The combination one uniform is to be worn by Air Force members who decide to wear a uniform while traveling by commercial means in conjunction with permanent change of station, temporary-duty or leave. It is not required when commuting to and from work by commercial means. Commanders of major commands or installations may establish exceptions because of climatic conditions or other unique situations.

The in-state tuition question poses problems for parents

By Capt. Stephen R. Smith Base Legal Office

Will your children be entering college in North Carolina next fall? Are you certain of your legal residency status and how that affects your children's tuition rate, whether it will be at the in-state tuition rate?

The general law on residency, or "domicile" as the more correct legal terminology, involves that place where an individual has his or her permanent home and to which, whenever the choice is available, he or she has the intention of returning.

To establish legal residency in a given state a person must simultaneously: (1) be physically present within the state; (2) have the intent of making that state a permanent residence; and (3) intend to abandon the old state of residency. Unless all three acts occur at the same time, there can be no change of legal residency.

North Carolina follows the general rule on domicile, as regards student residence classification for tuition purposes. A legal resident is defined as a person who qualifies as a domiciliary of (i.e., one who has established domicile in) North Carolina, according to North Carolina general statutes.

to North Carolina general statutes.
Not set out in the statute itself, but set out in an explanatory manual published by the North Carolina State Board of Education is the guidance that domicile may be established by birth, by operation of law (where, in the case of a minor, the presumption is that the minor's legal residency is that of the parents) or by schoice of the parents), or by choice.

The guidance goes on to say that intent to establish residency may be shown by the following factors:

• Living or not living in the home of one's parents.

Place where one voted or registered to vote.

Place where one serves on jury duty.

• Place where one last registered and/or licensed a car.

• Place where one last acquired a drivers' license.

• Place where one has filed state income tax returns.

• Place where one maintains personal property and last listed such for taxation.

 Place where one owns real property and pays taxes thereon. Place where one is employed or works gainfully, etc.

The state statute also says "to qualify as a resident for tuition purposes, a person must have established legal residence (domicile) in North Carolina and maintained that legal residence for at least 12 months immediately prior to his or her classification as a resident for tuition purposes."

Thus, in the case of parents who mistakenly thought they had already established legal residency in North Carolina, next fall is too late to correct the problem by attempting to establish domicile and qualify your child for the more advantageous in-state tuition rate. Those parents would probably be unable to qualify their child for the lower rate until the following fall, i.e., fall of 1983.

The long range implications of the parents' action are important.

This article does not specifically address those children or dependents who will independently be able to establish legal residency in North Carolina apart from their parents or sponsors. This article attempts to address those minors and persons below the age of 18 years, who are presumed to be legally incapable of establishing residency independent of that of their parents, unless the evidence establishes otherwise.

I urge you to consider the implications of the law at the proper time, and not when it is too late!

Further inquiry may be directed to Pope's Legal Office, Bldg. 306, or by calling 394-2341.

Energy tip

Can you find one driving trip per week that could be handled by telephone? If every automobile took just one less 10-mile trip per week, our country would save about 3.5 billion a year, or nearly five percent of the total passenger car demand for gas.
