

Vice commander of AFMPC visits Pope

By A1C Andrew Knef

"If we continue to receive pay increases year after year that will keep our people's pay comparable to their fellow workers, the all volunteer force can continue to work," Brig. Gen. Winfield S. Harpe said during his visit here Jan. 11-15.

General Harpe is the vice commander of the Air Force Manpower and Personnel Center, Randolph AFB, Texas and the Deputy Assistant, Deputy Chief of Staff of Manpower and Personnel.

With the AFMPC commander, he shares the responsibility for overall force distribution and management of all Air Force people below the rank of Brigadier General.

The general headed up an AFMPC team which conducted briefings and personal counseling sessions here on all aspects of assignments and promotions for military members of all ranks.

General Harpe emphasized the all volunteer force is working for the Air Force. He added the primary problem has been with the other services.

While admitting a strong correlation between the health of the economy and military retention, the general said that internal changes within the Air Force "...have done a great deal to make people happier about serving in the military.

"In the past year our retention rate has gone up much higher than the employment rate," he said. "Even though the attraction for the outside is pretty strong, many more of our people are willing to stay in uniform now that the economic sacrifice is not as strong as it used to be."

General Harpe said that he viewed the current administrations commitment to rebuilding the strength of American defense as a "very positive change," adding "the defense buildup will continue to compete with those other priorities that the administration needs to deal with."

When asked about the future availability of joint assignments for military couples, he said that AFMPC would continue to work very hard to keep couples together, but that joint spouse assignments were no longer "automatic." Currently the Air Force maintains a successful match-up rate of well over 90 percent, according to the general.

General Harpe said that Air Force programs which attempt to balance critical shortages in some career fields would have a major impact on Air Force members in the coming years. Among these are the restructuring of AFSC's, selective reenlistment bonuses, the palace balance program and the two-tiered promotion system.

Brig. Gen. Winfield Harpe

General Harpe said that if he could change one thing in the entitlement area it would be to lessen the impact of relocation on Air Force members.

"Today it is an enormous sacrifice," he said. "Relocation costs--new housing costs--just the travel costs--make it very difficult to move our people around."

On other matters the general said:

• "We are going to work very hard to try and get some sort of G.I. Bill.

• "The Air Force, which is short 1,000 engineers, will offer engineer continuation bonuses, a college senior engineering program and by leaving pilots assigned to engineering duties in those jobs.

• "Only applicants for technical careers, pilots, navigators and missileers will be considered this year for Officer Training School.

• "After a thorough review no plans have been made to eliminate senior airman and sergeant ranks from non-commissioned officer status.

• "Family service centers, designed as a focal point for all family services will be evaluated over the next two years and may be implemented throughout the Air Force.

• "A new regulation on dependent care will require all single parents to make arrangements for their dependents and certify their worldwide assignability.

"We are trying hard to educate Air Force people about why the promotion and assignment system works the way it does," the general explained. "Without question the Air Force has the finest Personnel system in the defense department. We are very far ahead in the way we manage people."

AF Deputy JAG praises Pope attorneys

By 1st Lt. Brian P. Hoey

Swiftly processing Article 15 punishments earned Pope attorneys and commanders high praise from Air Force Deputy Judge Advocate General Maj. Gen. James Taylor, Jr., during his two-day staff assistance visit here Jan. 13-14.

"I've visited six other bases before this and at Pope I don't have to say something I've had to say at each of the others. There, I've asked commanders to pay more attention to suspenses on Article 15s.

"I won't do that here. You have the best percentage of any base in the 21st Air Force, so it's obvious you're already paying attention," General Taylor told a group of 33 commanders and first sergeants at the Officers' Club luncheon Thursday.

"Whatever you're doing, please don't fix it," he said.

Maj. Harmon Massey, Pope Staff

Judge Advocate, said, "What this means is that 70 percent of our Article 15s are administered within 10 days of the offense. The Air Force standard is 70 percent, and we lead all bases in 21st in that measure of processing.

"The thrust of our efforts is that essentially old justice is no justice. If (an article 15) is going to be effective as a disciplinary tool, it has to be administered while the offense is still fresh in the mind," he added.

General Taylor also cautioned commanders about the recent implementation of urinalysis testing for drugs by the Department of Defense.

"You may conduct urinalysis testing as part of an inspection, the same way you would inspect a dormitory for contraband. But wide (unit) sweeps may turn a lot of good people off," he said.

"I suspect that urinalysis testing will have its greatest value in deterrence."

The general also urged people to take advantage of the legal assistance available.

"I believe we should stress the importance of legal assistance to Air Force members. The quality of legal assistance is the best it's ever been. We are getting exceptionally bright, talented young lawyers into the Air Force," he said, adding that most of those graduate in the top 25 percent of their law school classes.

The general pointed out that the Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) that went into effect this month have received a great deal of attention in the military, including two-hour seminars in the Pentagon.

"Currently, I would suggest people seek some assistance on the new tax laws. In 30 years in the Air Force, I haven't seen the amount of attention given to anything as has been given to IRAs," he said.

CMSgt. of AF to speak at enlisted dining out

Chief Master Sergeant of the Air Force, Arthur L. "Bud" Andrews, will be guest speaker at an enlisted dining out Wednesday at the Noncommissioned Officers' Club.

As Chief Master Sergeant of the Air Force, Chief Andrews is advisor to the secretary and chief of staff of the Air Force on matters concerning welfare, effective use and progress of the enlisted members of the Air Force. He is the seventh chief master sergeant appointed to this top noncommissioned officer position.

During his 27 years of service in the Air Force, Chief Andrews has been assigned to 15 bases in eight states and four foreign countries. He enlisted in the Air Force in January 1953.

After 12 years as an air policeman and investigator, the chief cross-trained into the first sergeant career field. In 1977 he was selected as Senior Enlisted Advisor to the commander of the Electronic Systems Division at Hanscom AFB, Mass. and in 1978 became Senior Enlisted Advisor for Air Force Systems Command, Andrews AFB, Md.

He assumed his current duties Aug. 1, 1981.

Cocktail hour for the dining out will begin at 6 p.m. and dinner at 7 p.m. The menu will be prime rib, potato with all the trimmings and wine.

Dress will be formal mess or semi-formal combination 1 with bow tie and white shirt for men and white blouse with black tab for women. Name tags are not worn with combination 1, however, brass, ribbons and decorations will be worn.

Tickets are available from squadron first sergeants for $10 per person.

Weighty comment

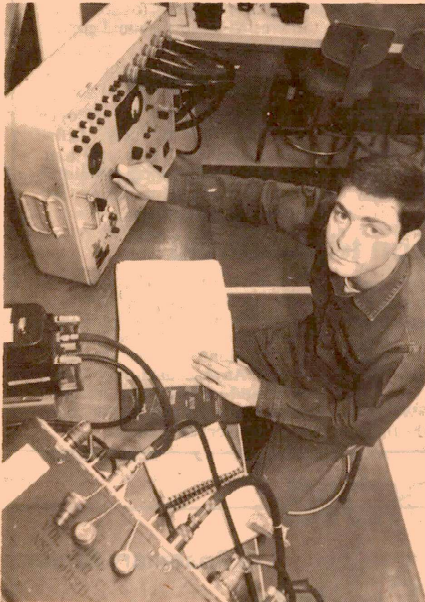

I just wanted to put forth a suggestion on the overweight program since it appears it is being pushed Air Force wide. It seems as if a weigh-in at inprocessing might help eliminate the problem.

Your're right! A weigh-in should be accomplished soon after arrival at a new duty station. Since unit commanders are responsible for conducting and recording weight checks, as well as follow-on programs and physical fitness testing, accomplishing this weigh-in at unit in-processing makes the most sense.

Many units have already initiated an in-processing weigh-in and have expanded the program to include an out-processing weigh-in as well.

These programs have been very effective in identifying overweight people.

SrA. Cary G. Thrift
Airman of the year

SSgt. William E. Brown
NCO of the year

MSgt. Donald B. Hines
Senior NCO of the year

Three enlisted people named best of year

Three people were chosen this month as Pope's enlisted people of the year for 1981.

SrA. Cary G. Thrift, Jr., 317th Avionics Maintenance Squadron, was named Airman of the Year. Noncommissioned Officer of the Year is SSgt. William E. Brown, 317th Security Police Squadron, and Senior NCO of the Year is MSgt. Donald B. Hines, Detachment 21, 15th Weather Squadron.

SrA. Cary G. Thrift

A native of Decatur, Ga., Airman Thrift came in the Air Force in November, 1979. He is an avionics instrument systems specialist in the 317th AMS.

Airman Thrift has applied to the Air Force Academy and hopes to become a fighter pilot.

"That's the main reason I came into avionics instrument systems," he said. "I wanted to more fully understand how all the instruments work to help me be a better pilot."

While waiting for approval of his Academy application, Airman Thrift is attending Golden Gate University to work on a degree in electronics engineering. He also is working toward a private pilot's license.

"I'm really proud of the award," he said, "it keeps me much more motivated and helps me motivate other people—to tell them what a great life the Air Force is."

SSgt. William E. Brown

With five years Air Force service behind him, Sergeant Brown said he is, "learning in the direction of an Air Force career."

The 24-year-old native of Baltimore, Md., said, "When I was selected Airman of the Quarter, I felt very fortunate. But winning the award for the year is a real honor."

Sergeant Brown recently attended NCO Leadership School. He also takes part in squadron athletic activities. He said he plays on every Security Police Squadron teams except basketball.

MSgt. Donald B. Hines

As the top ranking NCO at Det. 21, Sergeant Hines has many duties. His official title is chief of weather station operations, but he takes care of all the first sergeant duties and manages all enlisted people at the weather station. "It is a busy job," he said.

Sergeant Hines joined the Air Force 15 years ago. "It's been good to me. We've had our ups and downs, but it's been very positive overall," he said.

"It's given me a chance to obtain an education while working in a variety of interesting jobs."

Sergeant Hines graduated from Chaminade College in Honolulu in 1975 with a bachelors degree in political science. He also has an associates degree in weather forecasting from the Community College of the Air Force and is working toward a masters degree in management.

Originally from Tennessee, Sergeant Hines currently lives in Fayetteville with his wife, Cindy, and their two children, Jennifer, 10 and Daniel, 5.

Per diem equity hits snag

WASHINGTON (AFNS) -- After more than seven years of work by the Air Force to correct the financial inequity experienced by enlisted members when on temporary duty, the goal seemed to be achieved when the president signed the Uniformed Services Pay Act of 1981.

Based on that law, effective Nov. 1, 1981, enlisted members became entitled to the basic allowance for subsistence when on TDY, in addition, enlisted members on temporary duty became entitled to the food portion of per diem in cash. The amount for the food portion of per diem would be dependent upon the availability of a government dining facility -- $19.50 per day when a government mess was not available and $9.30 per day when a facility was available. These changes accorded officers and enlisted members similar treatment when TDY.

With the implementation of these provisions, the Air Force was confident that its intensive effort to provide similar treatment to all Air Force people when on temporary duty had finally been achieved.

However, during the review of the fiscal 1982 DoD Appropriations Bill, the House Appropriations Committee concluded that payment of both basic allowance for subsistence and the food portion of per diem to enlisted members constituted dual payment for the same expenses.

The committee also rationalized that the reduction was warranted because enlisted members were entitled to substantially more per month in the basic allowance for subsistence--$135 a month--than were officers--$94.39 a month.

As a result, the committee included a funding restriction in the FY 1982 DoD Appropriations Act which limits enlisted members traveling under government orders to reimbursement equal to either the subsistence allowance or the portion of per diem specified for food, whichever is greater.

During the course of the House and Senate committee mark-ups of the Appropriations Bill, Air Force and other services were led to believe that this restriction would apply only to enlisted members when on temporary duty. However, on Jan. 4, the secretary of defense general counsel's office advised the services that it was its interpretation of the statutory language that this limitation must also be applied to per diem allowances received by enlisted members in conjunction with permanent change of station travel.

The Air Force is working to have the Congress clarify its intent and remove the application to PCS as soon as possible, subsequently, the Air Force goal is to eliminate the restrictive language completely.

In the interim, enlisted members will be entitled to the following payments in cash when on TDY and PCS travel:

- Enlisted members on PCS or TDY orders--except for members on sea duty, field duty and certain other unique situations--will be entitled to receive BAS regardless of BAS or subsistence-in-kind--meal card--status at their home station.

- Enlisted members on TDY will also receive the subsistence portion of per diem in cash. However, because the law requires this amount be reduced by the BAS, the subsistence portion of per diem will be $15 (mess not available) and $4.90 (mess available); in overseas areas the applicable per diem subsistence will be reduced by $4.50 per day.

The per diem payable to enlisted members in PCS status will be $45.50 per day instead of the full $50 rate.

Air Force officials say, "Although the Appropriations Committee action is a setback to the per diem equity goal, the majority of enlisted members in TDY status are better able to meet enroute food expenses than before the pay bill was enacted."

This assessment is based on the fact that in the majority of cases dining halls are available for enlisted members and they will now have $9.30 to pay for meals in a government dining facility or to use at their discretion in commercial facilities. In contrast, before the pay bill was enacted, those on meals card had no discretionary cash and those on BAS were only provided the BAS to pay for their meals, regardless of where consumed.

Dependent-care policy tightens

WASHINGTON (AFNS) -- Inadequate dependent-care arrangements must not interfere with a military member's obligation to meet the full range of military duties. That point is brought home in a revised Air Force regulation 35-59, which took effect in January.

For single parents and military couples with families this means some air-tight dependent-care plans must be made. A non-military person must be available on a moment's notice if the member or members are suddenly and unexpectedly called to duty. A non-military person should also be ready to provide care for extended periods.

In overseas areas, single parents and military couples on accompanied tours are expected to make plans for evacuating their dependents in case of a national emergency. A non-military person should be designated to care for the dependents during the evacuation on military aircraft.

The regulation makes clear the types of duty members can expect in the Air Force: extended duty hours, shift work, recalls, alert duty, deployments, temporary duty and unaccompanied assignments.

To make sure single parents and military couples know their dependent-care responsibilities, counseling will be conducted every October or when a member is placed on a mobility roster or notified of reassignment. The member also will be counseled before reenlistment or when pregnancy is confirmed.

Upon arrival at a new duty station, a member has 60 days to certify that dependent-care arrangements have been made. Unit commanders provide initial counseling and ensure the paperwork is completed.

The regulation also covers the possible disciplinary or separation action a member can expect if adequate dependent-care plans are not made.

Also changed by the regulation is the post-delivery reassignment and temporary-duty deferment for servicewomen. The automatic 12-month post-delivery deferment for reassignment has been reduced to six months. The automatic six-month deferment for temporary duty is now at the discretion of the commander.
