TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

The Air Force C-130 cargo plane skims a runway at Fort Bragg seconds before crashing during a training exercise.

Cargo plane crashes; 5 killed

Knight-Ridder Newspapers
Nearly 5,000 horrified spectators watched an Air Force C130 cargo plane crash and explode at Fort Bragg on Wednesday morning, killing four of six crew members and a soldier on the ground.

George Higgins, one of about 60 Charlotte-area business and community leaders watching the joint Army-Air Force air show, said the accident was "sickening."

"You knew it was death ... like watching death in slow motion," said Higgins, a Mecklenburg County commissioner.

"It was like when Kennedy was assassinated. I'll never forget where I was on July 1 or who was sitting beside me when I watched the plane crash," Higgins said.

Higgins and the other Charlotte visitors flew to Fort Bragg aboard a C130 as guests of the North Carolina Air National Guard.

The crash of the four-engine turboprop, occurred during an Airborne Capabilities Exercise, or CAPEX, put on before more than 1,000 civilians from the Southeast and nearly 4,000 military family members and ROTC cadets in summer training at Fort Bragg. The plane crashed about 10:25 a.m., just after the demonstration began.

The plane was one of two scheduled to demonstrate an exercise in which a parachute pulls a piece of heavy equipment from the rear of the plane as it flies a few feet above the ground.

Witness G.P. "Pat" Hunter, Mecklenburg County Police Department attorney, said the plane's path seemed to shift as it approached the dirt runway on Fort Bragg's Sicily Drop Zone. Hunter was about 200 feet away from where the plane, which was unloading a tank, hit the ground.

"About 400 or 500 feet from the stands, the pilot seemed to make a correction. There were two sets of flags and he was supposed to fly between one of them," he said.

"Then he had to make a descent and suddenly it was a dive. He dropped straight down. When the parachute came out, the back end of the plane hit the ground. It left the tailgate on the tarmac."

The tank appeared to hang on the edge of the tailgate as the plane skimmed 5 feet above the runway. Officials estimated the plane's speed at 150 mph.

The plane skidded along the runway, leaving the tank, tail section and pieces of metal along the way, Hunter said.

"Then there was a large black smoke cloud as the plane exploded," he said. "We just knew there was no survivors with that much fire and smoke. We were pleased to learn there were survivors."

Cameras take place in courtrooms

By MARK BOCCHETTI

VIRGINIA BEACH — Cameras will enter the courtrooms next week for the murder trials of Michael and Karen Diehl.

The first televised view from a Virginia courtroom was broadcast Wednesday, however, as local television stations used footage of separate hearings at which Circuit Judges Edward W. Hanson Jr. and Alan Rosenblatt denied defense requests to exclude cameras.

They ruled Wednesday that local news organizations could place one video camera and one still camera in each courtroom as part of a two-year experiment decreed by the General Assembly.

Broadcasts will begin after jury selection.

The Diehls are charged with murder, abduction, child neglect and felony assault in the Oct. 29 death of 13-year-old Dominick "Andrew" Diehl, a child who had been adopted.

Attorneys for both Diehls lamented the rulings as violations of their clients' constitutional rights and an element that would inject community pressure into the courtroom.

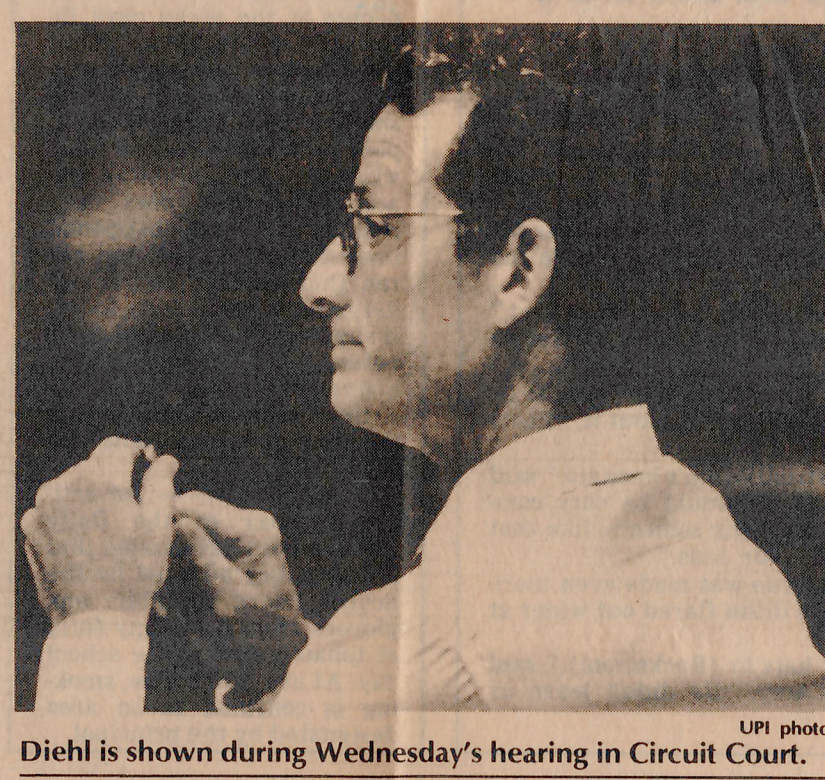

Commonwealth's Attorney Paul A. Sciortino, however, supported the presence of cameras.

"I don't think it's going to add any pressure to the witnesses," Sciortino said. "In fact, I don't think it's going to have that much of an impact on the trial."

"You don't experiment with the constitutional rights of people," defense attorney Thomas Shuttlesworth argued. His client, Karen Diehl, did not attend the hearing.

The presence of cameras will create pressure on the jury to render a verdict consistent with community sentiment, he said.

Reagan choice for high court chills liberals

Knight-Ridder Newspapers
WASHINGTON — For Ronald Reagan and his legacy, the nomination of Robert H. Bork to a crucial Supreme Court seat seems ideal.

Bork, a portly, bearded, 60-year-old chain smoker, is a highly respected legal scholar and jurist whose restrained approach to the Constitution, respect for the "original intent" of its authors, and allegiance to a limited view of a judge's powers have endeared him to conservatives.

At the same time, however, Bork's role in the "Saturday Night Massacre" of the Watergate era, his narrow concept of personal privacy and free speech, and his criticism of Supreme Court decisions on abortion and court-ordered school desegregation have endeared him to liberals.

Confirmation of Bork might shift balance

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON — Robert H. Bork's nomination to be the third pillar of President Reagan's attempted reconstruction of the Supreme Court has political liberals as worried as they were over Richard Nixon's appointment of four justices nearly two decades ago.

Will Bork's appointment, if confirmed by the Senate, spark the judicial revolution Nixon failed to ignite? Some are convinced it will.

One liberal group, People for the American Way, said the appointment, announced Wednesday, "would dramatically shift the balance ... turning back the clock on individual protections that Americans have relied on for 30 years."

North 'friendly' in private session

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fired White House aide Oliver L. North, ending seven months of silence, was questioned in a "friendly and businesslike" session Wednesday about President Reagan's role in the Iran-Contra affair.

Wearing his olive-green Marine Corps uniform with six rows of decorations, North gave a "thumbs up" signal to a bystander and smiled as he entered a green-carpeted room in the basement of the Rayburn House Office Building for a private interrogation by House and Senate lawyers.

North then took his seat for questioning by Arthur L. Liman, chief counsel for the Senate investigative committee, and John Nields, the top lawyer for the House panel. He left one hour and 40 minutes later.

Robert Havel, a spokesman for the House committee, said North was put under oath midway through the session and went through the prescribed formula of at first refusing to answer questions because of his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination. He was then formally granted limited immunity and responded to a series of questions lasting about 25 minutes.

North is to undergo public questioning on July 7.

Chisman Creek cleanup may be in offing

By MARK DI VINCENZO
Staff Writer
YORK — A verbal agreement has been reached on "a major stumbling block" that is expected to speed up the final paperwork involving the Chisman Creek fly ash site and make it possible for cleanup to begin by late summer.

Negotiations between Virginia Power, which had the potentially hazardous fly ash dumped at the site, and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency appeared to stall in recent weeks, delaying cleanup work at the site just west of Seaford.

But a letter from Virginia Power confirming the agreement is expected to reach EPA's regional office in Philadelphia today or Friday, a Virginia Power spokesman said Wednesday.

The fly ash particles are the byproduct of coal-burning furnaces at the utility's Yorktown plant and were dumped in four borrow pits between 1957 and 1974. They were later found to contaminate underground water supplies of residents near Seaford.

In light of the breakthrough in negotiations last week, Virginia Power officials have indicated that by Sept. 1 they would like to begin installing an underground drainage system at the pit closest to Chisman Creek, according to Fran Burns, project manager for EPA. The other pits are to be capped with layers of soil and clay.

Christopher J. Corbett, a project officer with EPA, said Wednesday the stumbling block dealt with what Virginia Power would pay EPA for work it has

Counselor becomes superhero; saves boy who fell in manhole

BOSTON (AP) — A youth counselor inched his way down a storm drain — his feet against one wall and his back against the other — to rescue a boy who fell down a manhole.

Jonathan Backstrom, on his second day on the job, pulled the frightened boy from the murky water at the bottom of the dark drain.

Firefighters called the rescue amazing and promptly christened Backstrom "Spider-Man" after the comic strip hero.

The firefighters arrived just minutes after Ronald Monroe slipped down the hole near the Children's Museum.

Monroe, 10, was among about 15 children from the Cambridge Youth Enrichment Program on a field trip to the museum.

The boy apparently didn't see the open manhole, although two orange warning barrels had been placed around it while a contractor worked on the drainage system.

"He was walking and talking and all of a sudden just fell," said Philip Lature, 10.

"He was screaming," said Jamie Knight, 10, who also was on the field trip. "His face had all this stuff on it."

Backstrom, 20, said he had glanced over his shoulder at the children following him to the museum.

"All of a sudden, (Monroe) disappeared," he said. "It was like he was gone. It was so quick."

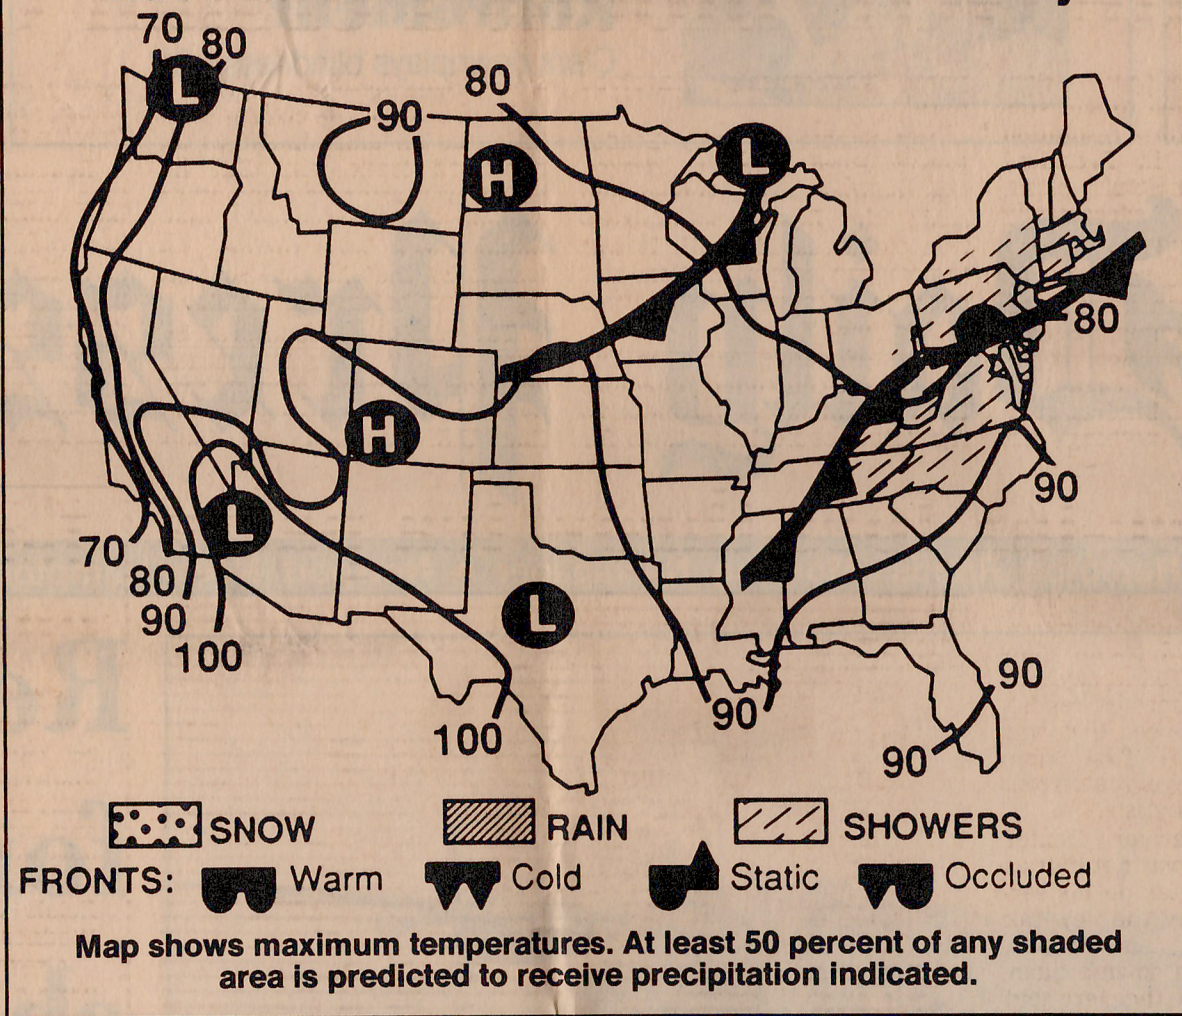

"I ran over, and I was definitely going to go down after him. I didn't think about it," Backstrom said.

"The kid (Backstrom) didn't hesitate," said Fire Lt. Jack Joyce. "It would be very comforting to a parent knowing someone like that was taking care of your kids."

Joyce said the rescue was made even more difficult because the drain flared out wider at the bottom.

"We tipped our hats to (Backstrom)," said Firefighter Paul Carey. "He didn't leave us much to do."
